MRS. BOWSER BUTTS IN.

And That's the Reason Mr. Bowser Didn't Orate.

"I shall be out this evening," re-marked Mr. Bowser as he rose from the dinner table with a look of importance on his face.

"I was going to ask you to go to a moving peture place with me," replied Mrs. Bowser as she followed him up-

"It would be useless. The pictures will have to move without us." "Then it's something important?"

'Very important?"

"So very important that a thousand dollars wouldn't keep me at home." Some club?"

"Two weeks ago, Mrs. Bowser, I was elected a member of the Most High and Noble and Ancient Humanitarians. I don't recollect whether I said anything about it to you or not?"
"No. you didn't. So they have a meeting tonight?" They do, and I am to deliver an oration. I don't know whether I mentioned that fact or not."

"No; I think you didn't. Have you got the oration written out?"

"Mrs. Bowser, I am a man that don't have to write out my speeches and orations. After I have chosen my sub-ject the words come to me spontane-Sometimes my thoughts come me far faster than I can expresa "Y-e-s. You are all prepared for this

"And takes him to his own home and feeds him up and then calls in a doctor?"
"Just so."
"And the doctor says the man can be cured, but it will cost money, as he must make good to a disappointed cemete, y company and an undertaker?"
"Yes, something like that."
"And the Ancient tells him to go ahead, and he does, and the man is cured and later on becomes a great statesman?"
"Yes."

"Y-e-5."

"And thus you point your moral and adorn your tale, and you also get before the public the real object and work of the club. Why don't you change it a little. Mr. Bowser?"

"Where—how?"

"Make your man a woman, and when she is cured have her go out as cook. You see, we have too many statesmen and too few cooks." By thunder, woman, I believe you have been making fun of me all the time!"

shouted Mr. Bowser, as he sprang up.
She was red-faced and gurgling.
"If you have—"
Mrs. Bowser tried to get up stairs, but the way was blocked. She tried to get down to the basement, but Mr. Bowser headed her off. Then she had to laugh in lis presence. She laughed till the tears came, and it was three or four minutes before he said:

"Woman, this is too much—too much!"
"But it's so funny!"

"Woman, this is too much—too much."

"But it's so funny!"

"You have crossed the dead-line at last and must pay the penalty."

"But I didn't mean—mean—"

"Too much and too late."

And he strode down the hall and clapped on his hat and left the house. To attend the meeting of the Most High and Noble and Ancient and deliver that oration? Not any! Mrs. Bowser had butted in and killed all that. He went down the street three blocks and sat down on the stone steps of a house to shiver and think, and he might have sat there all night had not the tenant of the house come to the door and shouted at him:
